

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election without equal time granted to the opposing side is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies appear to control the airwaves, financial influence takes the place of public interest.

Sinclair's actions appear to reflect the agenda of partisan special-interest groups. Please reassure me and the rest of the American public that this will not be tolerated.
